Malagasy Opinions on Public Services and Servants

Corruption and Decline vs Violence Prevention

Corey White

How do Malagasy Feel about Public Officials' Provision of Services?

Core Findings

Malagasy have an unfavorable opinion about the provision and maintenance of services on the island as well as public corruption, yet maintain a favorable view of the President and Assembly.

Findings

This dataset uses the Afrobarometer data on Madagascar. Key measurements include:

Entretien des routes et ponts/Maintenance of roads and bridges

Lutte contre la corruption au sein de l'administration publique/Combating corruption in public administration

Prévention ou résolution des conflits violents/Prevention or resolution to violent conflicts

Performance du Président/Performance of the President

Data

Malagasy have an unfavorable view on the maintenance of roads and bridges

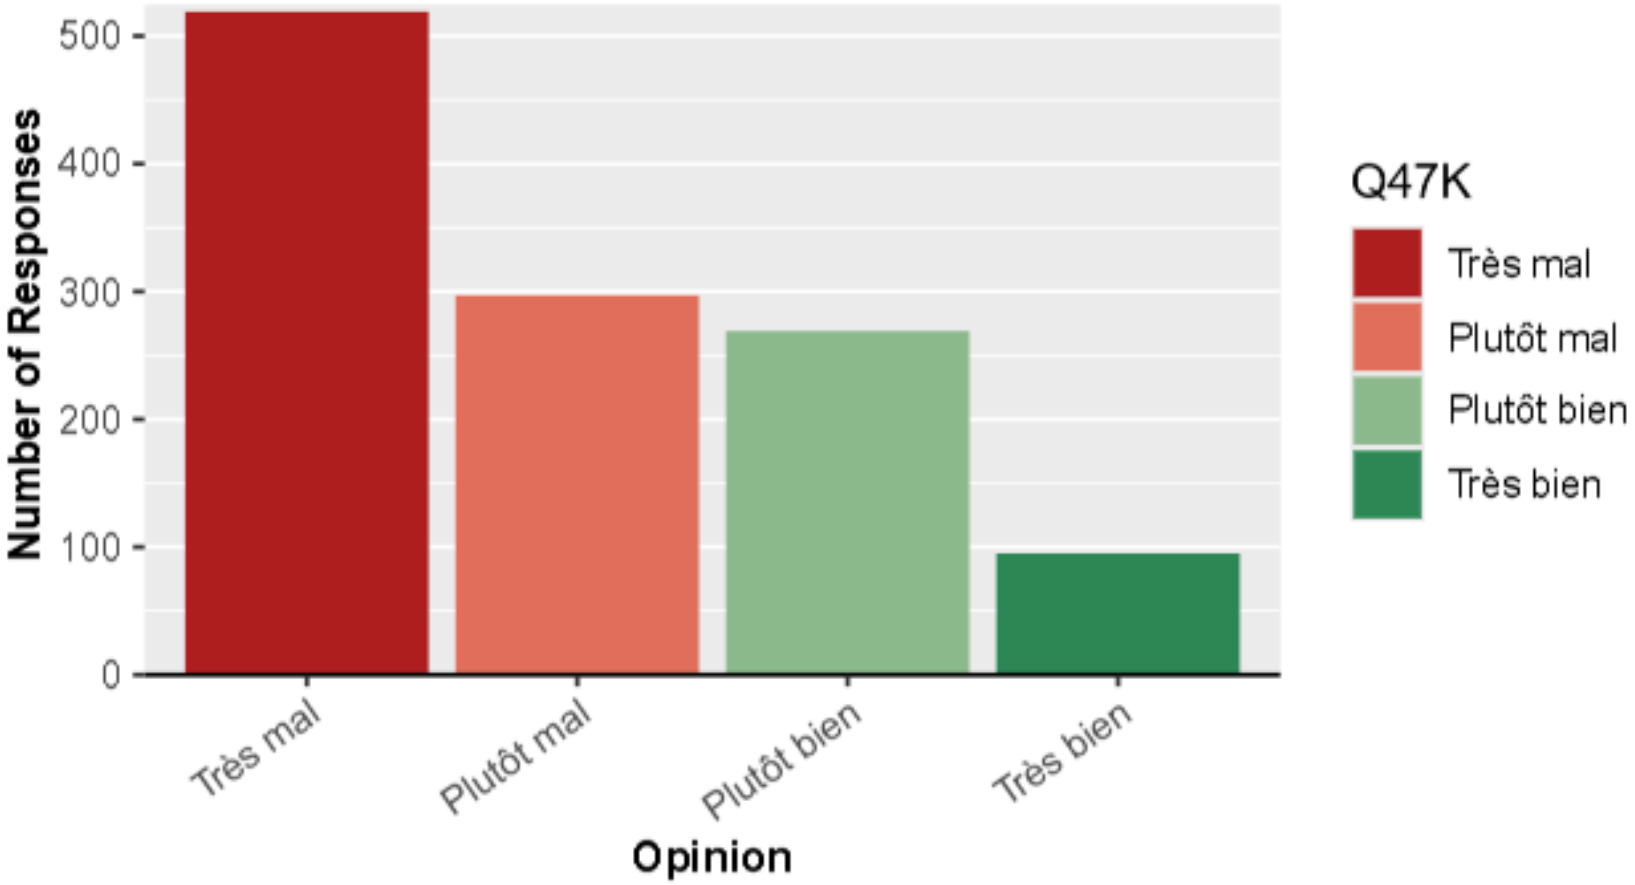

Figure 1: Maintenance of roads and bridges

Malagasy have an unfavorable view on controlling public corruption

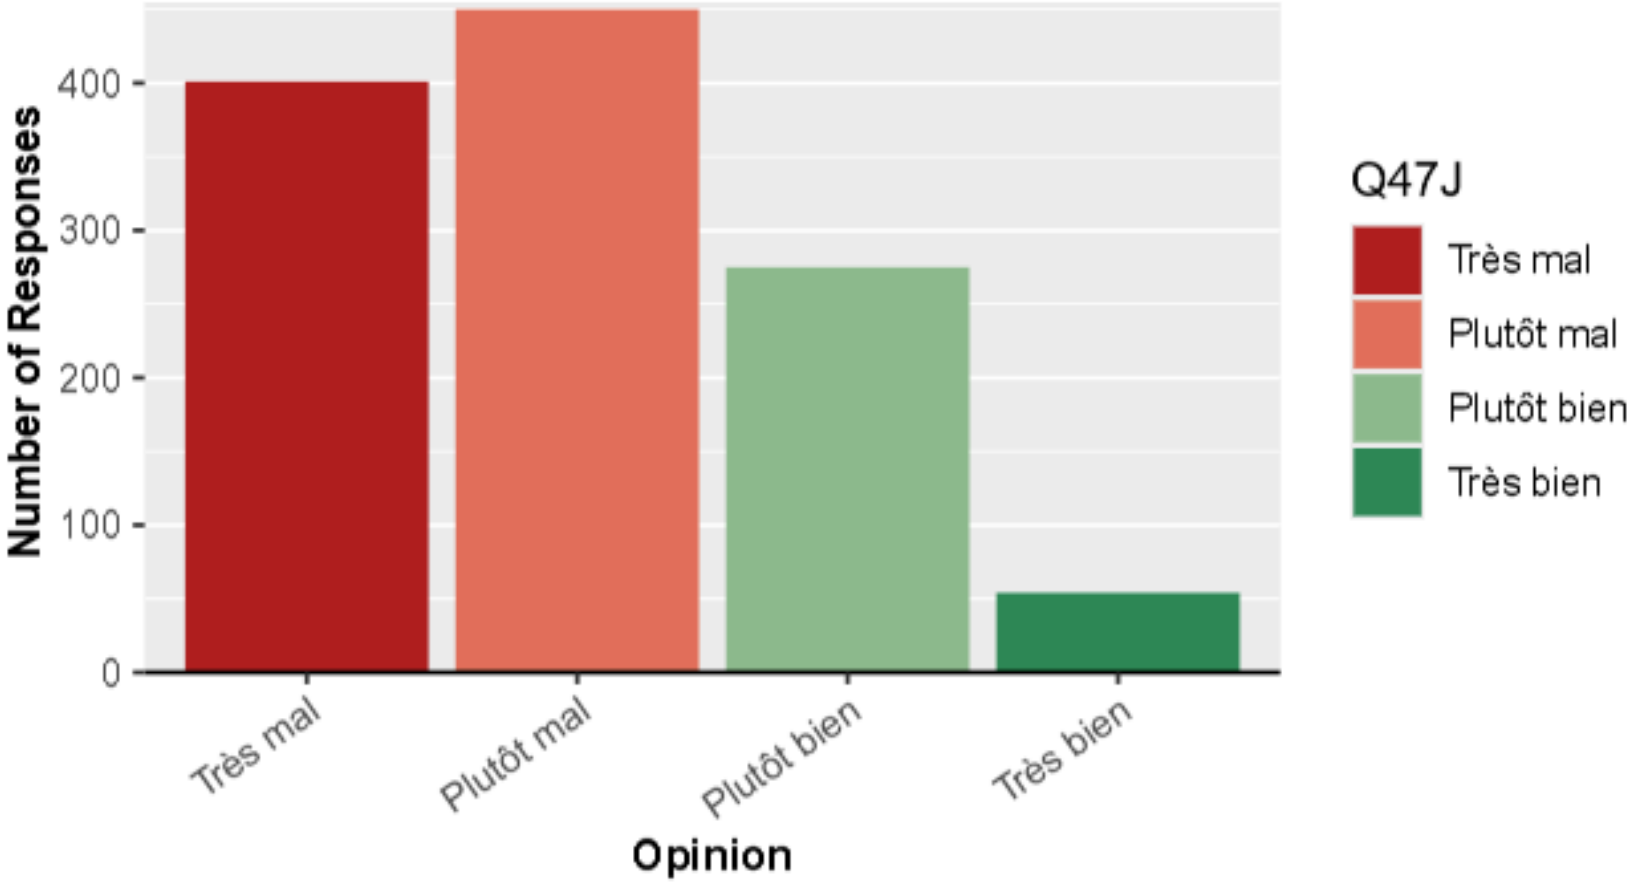

Figure 2: Combating corruption in public administration

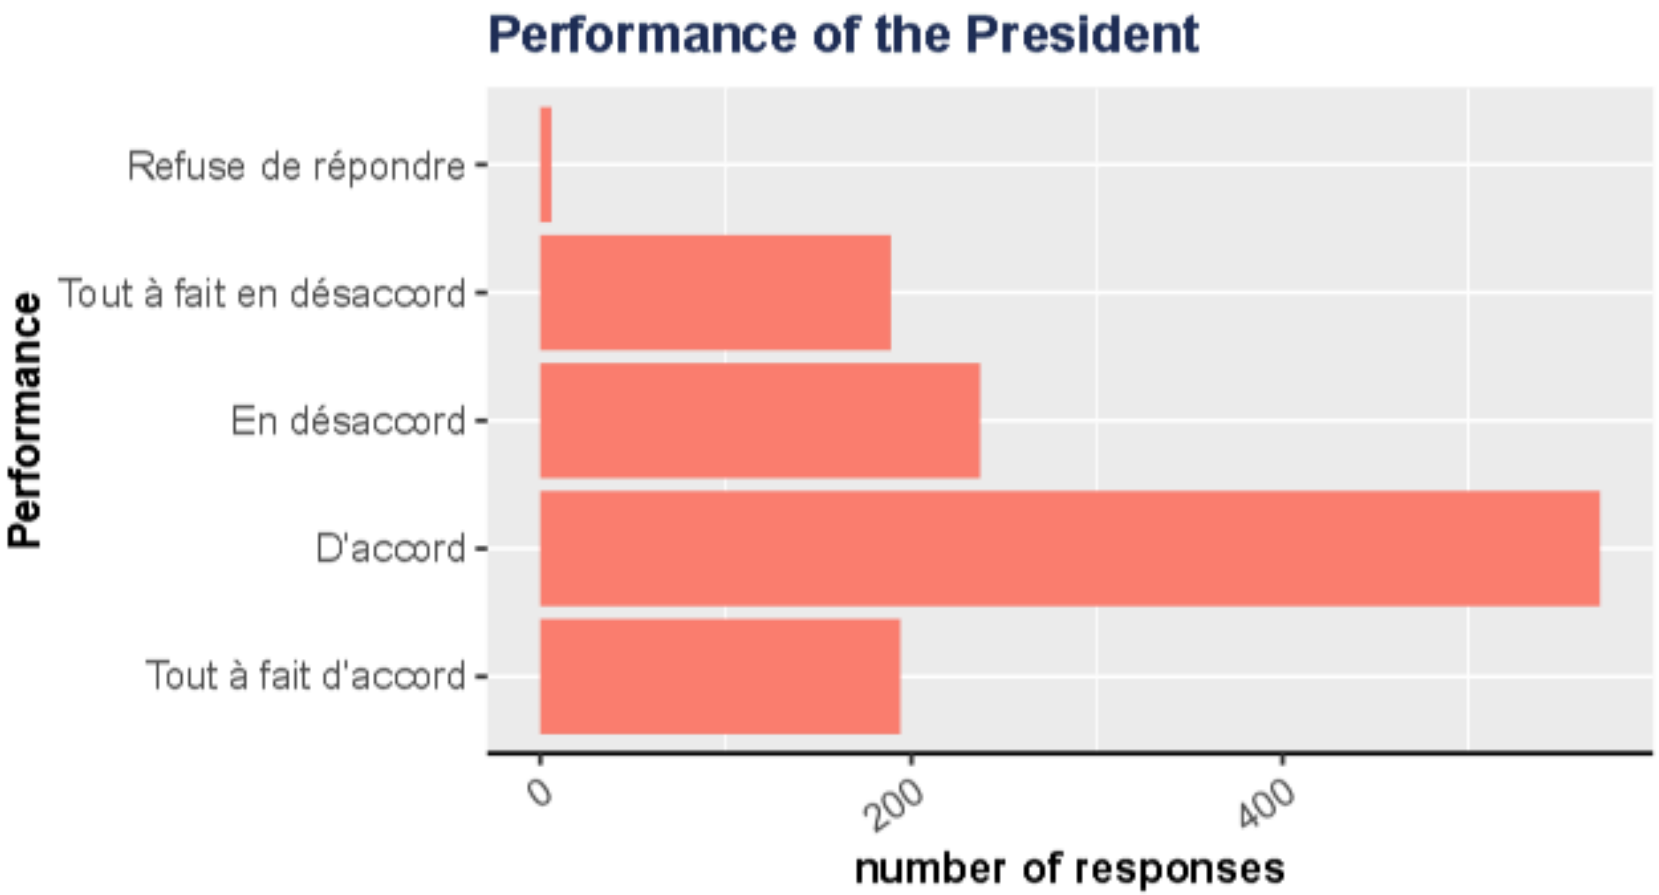
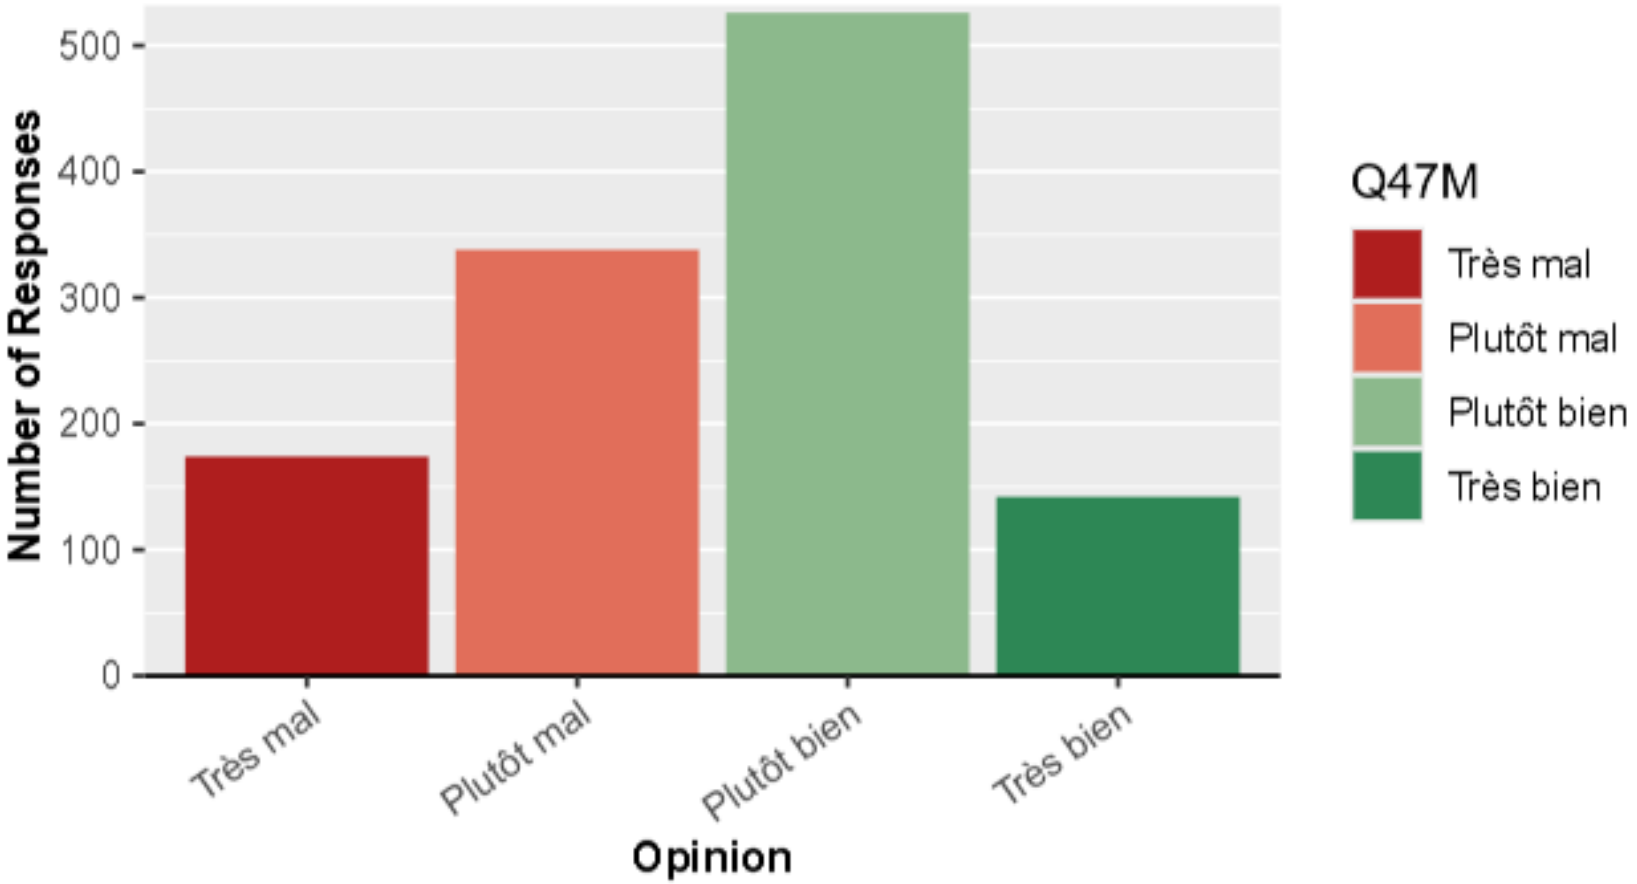
Yet, Malagasy have a Favorable View of the President.



Why do Malagasy favor the President if they cannot provide services?

We can determine this by looking at the violent conflict data



Conclusion

We may be able to conclude about why Malagasy favor their administration despite corruption and the ill maintenance of public services. If the Malagasy government is successful at ending violent conflicts, citizens may be more likely to overlook their outright corruption and the decline of the economy and public services including roads and electricity. To many Malagasy, outright stability is more important than the provision of services by the government.